

ANNALES ISLAMOLOGIQUES

en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne en ligne

AnIsl 25 (1991), p. 133-138

Th. Emile Homerin

The Domed Shrine of ibn al-Fāriḍ [avec 3 planches].

Conditions d'utilisation

L'utilisation du contenu de ce site est limitée à un usage personnel et non commercial. Toute autre utilisation du site et de son contenu est soumise à une autorisation préalable de l'éditeur (contact AT ifao.egnet.net). Le copyright est conservé par l'éditeur (Ifao).

Conditions of Use

You may use content in this website only for your personal, noncommercial use. Any further use of this website and its content is forbidden, unless you have obtained prior permission from the publisher (contact AT ifao.egnet.net). The copyright is retained by the publisher (Ifao).

Dernières publications

9782724711288	Karnak-Nord XI	Colin Hope
9782724711622	BIFAO 126
9782724711059	Les Inscriptions de visiteurs dans les Tombes thébaines	Chloé Ragazzoli
9782724711455	Les émotions dans l'Égypte Ancienne	Rania Y. Merzeban (éd.), Marie-Lys Arnette (éd.), Dimitri Laboury, Cédric Larcher
9782724711639	AnIsl 60
9782724711448	Athribis XI	Marcus Müller (éd.)
9782724711615	Le temple de Dendara X. Les chapelles osiriennes	Sylvie Cauville, Oussama Bassiouni, Matjaž Kačičnik, Bernard Lenthéric
9782724711707	????? ?????????? ?????????? ???? ?? ????????	Omar Jamal Mohamed Ali, Ali al-Sayyid Abdelatif
?? ???? ?? ??????? ??????? ?? ????????? ?????????? ??????????????

THE DOMED SHRINE OF IBN AL-FĀRIḌ

جز بالقرافة تحت ذيل العارض وقل السلام عليكم يا ابن الفارض

Cross over to the Qarāfa beneath the hem of al-ʿĀriḍ and say : “Peace be upon you
Oh Ibn al-Fāriḍ !”¹

The celebrated Egyptian Ṣūfī poet ʿUmar Ibn al-Fāriḍ died in Cairo on the second of Ġumādā I 632/1235. According to our earliest sources, he was buried the next day in Cairo’s al-Qarāfa cemetery below the al-ʿĀriḍ mosque at the foot of Mt. Muqaṭṭam². This mosque, no longer extant, was originally the site of a cave cut into the mountain by a certain Abū Bakr Muḥammad “the grandfather of Muslim al-Qārī.” There, Abū Bakr had experienced a vision of the prophet Muḥammad and so, built the mosque to which was later added a minaret by the Fatimid caliph al-Ḥākim (r. 386-411/996-1021). According to one tradition, Ibn al-Fāriḍ frequented the cave for spiritual retreat, and this may account for his burial in the area. Whatever the case, a stone was placed on the poet’s grave soon after his death, though a shrine was not erected³.

Interestingly, Ibn al-Fāriḍ’s grandson, Sibṭ ʿAlī (fl. 735/1334), claimed in his hagiography of Ibn al-Fāriḍ that the Ayyubid sultan of Egypt, al-Malik al-Kāmil (r. 615-635/1218-1238) proposed to construct a tomb for the poet beneath al-Šāfiʿī’s dome and next to the grave of the sultan’s mother. When Ibn al-Fāriḍ declined this proposal, al-Malik al-Kāmil offered to build the poet his own personal shrine. But according to Sibṭ ʿAlī, Ibn al-Fāriḍ likewise refused this offer, committing his death, and burial to God’s keeping and not to some corruptible earthly sovereign⁴.

Sibṭ ʿAlī deeply venerated his grandfather, and he may have related this story in an attempt to explain why Ibn al-Fāriḍ’s tomb had not been patronized in a manner befitting a holy man. This is undoubtedly the point of a second story from Sibṭ ʿAlī which tells of some respected ṣayḥs who once visited Ibn al-Fāriḍ’s tomb and found

1. Sibṭ ʿAlī, “Dibāġat Dīwān Ibn al-Fāriḍ,” in Dīwān Ibn al-Fāriḍ, ed. ʿAbd al-Ḥālīq Maḥmūd (Cairo : Dār al-Maʿārif, 1984), p. 25.

2. See Zakī al-Dīn al-Munḍirī, al-Takmila li-Wafayāt al-naqala, ed. Baššār ʿAwwād Maʿrūf (Cairo : Maṭbaʿat ʿĪsā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1968), 6:13, and Ibn Ḥallikān, Wafayāt al-aʿyān, ed. Iḥsān ʿAbbās (Beirut : Dār al-Ṭaqaḫa, 1968), 3 : 454-456.

3. Al-Maqrīzi, al-Mawāʿiẓ wa-l-iʿtibār bi-dīkr al-ḥiṭaṭ wa-l-āṭār, (Bagdad : Maktabāt al-Muṭannā, 1970), 2 : 456, and Ibn al-Zayyāt, al-Kawākib al-sayyāra, ed. Qāsim Muḥammad al-Raġab (Bagdad : Maktabat al-Muṭannā, 1967), p. 296. Perhaps the site of the al-ʿĀriḍ mosque was the limestone cliff which now supports the ḥanqāh of ṣayḥ Šāhin Ḥalwatī (10th / 16th c.).

4. Sibṭ ʿAlī, p. 35.

the stone piled with dirt. This sorry state of the grave did not surprise these religious men who knew that the world was rarely kind to the spiritually elect who had left the world for God. So, out of respect for the saintly Ibn al-Fāriḍ, the ṣayḥ personally cleared away the dirt⁵.

Sibṭ 'Alī also noted in his hagiography that the poet was buried below al-'Āriḍ because this was the gravesite of his grandfather's mystical teacher and guide, the Ṣayḥ al-Baqqāl, the old greengrocer. Though sources earlier than Sibṭ 'Alī — including accounts by some of Ibn al-Fāriḍ's students — are silent regarding this figure and any reason for burying Ibn al-Fāriḍ beneath al-'Āriḍ, Sibṭ 'Alī went on to recount fabulous tales involving the funerals of the two men there. The miraculous wonders which were said to have occurred on these occasions were clear proof to trusting believers that the greengrocer and Ibn al-Fāriḍ were among God's chosen Friends and this, in turn, sanctified the site and imbued it with sacred power⁶.

That Ibn al-Fāriḍ's grave was increasingly regarded as holy ground is evident from guidebooks on the Qarāfa, written during the 8-9th/14-15th centuries. Al-Muwaffaq Ibn 'Uṭmān (fl. 770-779/1369-1378) related several stories of Ibn al-Fāriḍ's spiritual powers in his guidebook, while Ibn al-Zayyāt (d. 805/1402) quoted large portions of Sibṭ 'Alī's hagiography of Ibn al-Fāriḍ⁷. Significantly, Ibn al-Zayyāt mapped out the tombs and shrines near Mt. Muqaṭṭam in terms of their positions in relation to Ibn al-Fāriḍ's tomb thus implying that the poet's grave was the spiritual center of the area. A later Mamluk writer Ḥalīl ibn Šāhīn al-Zāhirī (d. 872/1467), went so far as to compare the holiness of this site to that of Abraham's shrine in Hebron⁸.

Given Ibn al-Fāriḍ's rising popularity, it was only natural that his grave would become the recipient of Mamluk patronage. No doubt Mamluk patrons endowed this and other tombs in order to secure the esteem of their subjects and to enrich family members who might oversee the endowments. But, as importantly, this Mamluk elite hoped to gain religious reward through their attentions to holy persons whether living or dead. In Ibn al-Fāriḍ's case, the endowments began around 864/1460, as noted in the Qarāfa guide compiled by 'Alī al-Saḥāwī (fl. late 9th / 15th c.)⁹ :

The ṣayḥ's grave was without a screen (ḥāḡiz) for a long time. But, then, during the reign of the sultan Īnāl (r. 857-864/1453-1460), one of the Turks, named Timur al-Ibrāhīmī — the emancipated slave of the sultan Barsbāy — was entrusted with the visitation (ziyāra) of the grave, along with his protégé Barqūq al-Nāširī — the emancipated slave of sultan Jaqmaq — and a group of their party. The two of them began to administer its endowments (awqāf) and to feed

5. Sibṭ 'Alī, p. 41.

6. Ibid., p. 23-25, 40-41. See n. 1 for earlier sources.

7. Al-Muwaqqaf Ibn Uṭmān, Muršid al-zuwwār ilā qubūr al-abrār, ms. 5129 (Ta'riḥ), Cairo : Dār al-Kutub al-Miṣriya, fols. 204 b - 205 b; Ibn al-Nāsiḥ, Miṣbāḥ al-dayāḡi, ms. 1416 (Ta'riḥ), Cairo : Dār al-Kutub al-Miṣriya, fol. 135 b, and Ibn al-Zayyāt, p. 297-300.

8. Ḥalīl ibn Šāhīn al-Zāhirī, Zoubdat Kachf el-Mamālik, ed. Paul Ravaisse (Paris : Imprimerie Nationale, 1894), p. 30.

9. 'Alī al-Saḥāwī, Tuḥfat al-aḥbāb wa-buḡyat al-ṭullāb fi'l-ḥiṭaṭ wa'l-mazārāt, ed. Maḥmūd Rabī' and Ḥasan Qāsim (Cairo : Maṭba'at al-'Ulūm wa'l-Ādāb, 1937), p. 382-383.

and give alms to the mendicants (fuqarā') there. Then in the 860's/1460's, Timur endowed the ṣayḥ with portions of his iqṭā' which he purchased from the treasury, and he had a blessed shrine (maqām mubārak) built for (Ibn al-Fāriḍ), establishing there a paid care-taker (ḥādīm), and he made Barqūq the overseer.

Then Timur died in Cyprus, killed fighting the Franks, and Barqūq administered the splendid endowments at this shrine — which went toward preparing food and reciting the Qur'ān — until the sultan Qa'it Bāy was invested (872/1468). For he made Barqūq viceroy of Damascus (al-Šām), appointing another person as his substitute for (administering the endowments) until Barqūq died in Damascus. Then his son took his place in overseeing (the shrine) until this day.

It would appear from 'Alī al-Saḥāwī that the Mamluk amirs Timur al-Ibrāhīmī and Barqūq al-Nāširī were the major patrons of Ibn al-Fāriḍ's grave, and we are fortunate that Timur's endowment deeds have been preserved in Barqūq's own waqf document dated, 875/1470. From this to we learn that one-ninth of the revenues accruing to Timur's properties was to pay for the building and maintenance of a zāwiya, a Ṣūfī hostel, on the site. Any surplus funds were to be spent on bread, water, and other basic food-stuffs for the mendicants at the zāwiya and, after their needs were met, on the mendicants of Mecca and Medina. A second Timur endowment donated 225 dirhams annually for Ibn al-Fāriḍ's mawlid, or saint's day, to be held at the shrine every 14 Rabī' I. This sum helped to feed the poor and those in attendance at the event, and paid the Qur'ān chanters¹⁰.

Unfortunately, Barqūq's valuable document says nothing about the architectural features or materials used in the erection of the zāwiya, but the Egyptian historian Ibn Īyās (d. ca. 930/1524) noted that it was Barqūq who had the dome raised over Ibn al-Fāriḍ's grave prior to 877/1472¹¹. This small dome (Index no. 601; Pl. 1) is typical of the period; it is made of stone blocks with a carved masonry zig-zag pattern¹². The dome rests on four stalactite pendentives which descend into the small square shrine room. Between the pendentives and within each wall is an arch which reaches to the floor. The shrine may be entered by a door in the arches on the southeast and southwest. The arches on the northeastern and northwestern sides have large windows; the northwestern window is flanked by two stone columns on its exterior¹³.

The erection of this dome was a prestigious sign of Ibn al-Fāriḍ's religious reputation. Although more conservative religious scholars occasionally denounced the poet for monistic doctrines associated with his verse and rebuked the visitation of his tomb, this did little to limit Ibn al-Fāriḍ's fame throughout the Islamic world, and when the

10. Al-Sayfi Barqūq, Waqf 169 (Ḥuḡḡat Šar'īya), Cairo : Dār al-Waṭā'iḳ.

11. Ibn Īyās, Badā'i' al-zuhūr fī waqā'i' al-duhūr, ed. Paul Kahle and Muḥammad Muṣṭafā (Istanbul : Maṭba'at al-Dawlah, 1936), 3 : 80.

12. See Christel Kessler, The Carved Masonry Domes of Mediaeval Cairo (Cairo : American University Press, 1976), p. 26-29.

13. The dome's diameter is approximately 2 m. 65 cm.; the dome rises about 4 m. above the sides of the shrine which measure approx. 4 m. 70 cm. × 3 m. ht. I would like to thank Dr. Aḥmad Harīdī, Minya University, for helping me to measure the shrine.

Ottoman traveller Evliyā Çelebî (d. ca. 1095/1684) visited Cairo around 1080/1670, he paid a visit to Ibn al-Fāriḍ's shrine ¹⁴ :

It is a large shrine with a tekye, a congregational mosque (ğāmi'), with a soup kitchen (imāret) with mendicants attached. All the endowments are the pious works of al-Malik al-Kāmil since (Ibn al-Fāriḍ) died at the end of his reign in 632/1235.

It would appear that Evliyā Çelebî confused the story of al-Malik al-Kāmil's offer to build Ibn al-Fāriḍ a shrine with Timur's awqāf, but what is more significant in Evliyā's accounts is his specific reference to the mosque and other structures accompanying the poet's shrine. Evliyā also observed large crowds visiting the shrine every Friday in order to listen to recitations of Ibn al-Fāriḍ's verse and to seek his blessings ¹⁵. Evliyā Çelebî's descriptions of the site and the religious gatherings there were echoed by another traveller, 'Abd al-Ġānī al-Nābulusī (d. 1143/1731) who visited the shrine twice in 1105/1693 ¹⁶. He observed that the mosque had a minbar, a mihrāb, and a sudda for the muezzins. He further noted that he had watched the Friday session (ḥadra) there from a high gallery (riwāq) overlooking the participants, many of whom experienced ecstasy during the poetry recital ¹⁷.

About seventy years later, in 1173/1760, the Qāzduġlī Amīr al-Ḥaġġ, 'Alī Bāy al-Ġazzāwī, renovated the mosque and repaired the dome ¹⁸. While this attests to Ibn al-Fāriḍ's continued popularity, it also suggests that Timur's endowments were no longer operative since they were to pay for any needed repairs at the shrine. The warring Mamlūk factions of this period frequently appropriated endowment monies for themselves, and this may have been the fate of the shrine's revenues ¹⁹. It is also likely that Timur's awqāf were formally annulled and replaced by a nominal stipend in 1807-1809 as Muḥammad 'Alī (d. 1262-1848) attempted to control the religious establishment and increase his financial power ²⁰.

14. Evliyā Çelebî, Seyāhetnāmesi, (Istanbul : Devlet Matbassı, 1938), 10 : 238, 573. I am grateful to Dr. Robert Dankoff, University of Chicago, for his translations of Evliyā's accounts of the shrine.

15. Ibid., 10 : 238, 469-470, 573.

16. Al-Nābulusī, al-Ḥaqīqa wa'i-majāz fī riḥlat al-Šām wa-Miṣr wa'l-Ḥiġāz, ed. Aḥmad Haridī (Cairo : Al-Hay'a al-Miṣriya al-Āmma lil-Kitāb, 1986), p. 195-198.

17. Ibid., p. 279-280. For a detailed account of Evliyā Çelebî's experiences and those of al-Nābulusī at the shrine see my "Ibn al-Fāriḍ, a saint of Mamluk and Ottoman Egypt," in Saints and Sainthood in Islam, ed. Carl Ernst, forthcoming.

18. See 'Alī Mubārak, al-Ḥiṭāt al-Tawfiqiya

al-ğadida (Bulāq : al-Maṭba'a al-Kubrā al-Āmiriyya, 1887), 5 : 59, and Muḥammad Muṣṭafā Ḥilmī, Ibn al-Fāriḍ wa'l-ḥubb al-ilāhī, 2nd ed. (Cairo : Dār al-Ma'ārif, 1971), p. 55. There were two 'Alī Bāys at this time; the patron of Ibn al-Fāriḍ's mosque appears to have been the elder of the two since he was Amīr al-Ḥaġġ in 1173/1760. See John Livingstone, "The Rise of the Šayḥ al-Balad 'Alī Bey al-Kabīr : A Study in the Accuracy of the Chronicle of al-Jabartī," Bulletin for the School of Oriental and African Studies 33 (1970) : 283-294.

19. See Peter Gran, Islamic Roots of Capitalism : Egypt, 1760-1840 (Austin : University of Texas Press, 1979), p. 13.

20. Ibid., p. 31, and see 'Alī Mubārak's comments which follow.

In any case, Ibn al-FāriḌ's shrine was dilapidated when the topographer 'Alī Mubārak (d. 1311/1893) visited it in 1292/1875. His account of the site, however, contains our best extant description of the original mosque ²¹ :

(The mosque) has a pulpit (minbar) and four marble columns bearing two stone arches (bā'ika). Its roof is an indigenous one made of wood and palm-stocks. It has two prayer niches (qibla), one of which is old flanked by two small black stone columns and inside of which is a small stone column; there are also traces of old mother-of-pearl work inside. The other (niche) is a new one of stone. (The mosque) has a minaret, but most of its structures are in ruins. Inside is the tomb of the master 'Umar Ibn al-FāriḌ, and it receives a stipend (murattab).

'Alī Mubārak's account makes no mention of the zāwiya or soup kitchen and, probably, they were the ruins of which he spoke. No trace of them or the minaret remains, but as for the mosque itself, it was largely rebuilt in 1307/1889. This restoration project was financed by Ğamīla Hānim, daughter of the Ḥedive Ismā'īl (r. 1280-1290/1863-1873), who built her own large domed crypt directly adjacent to the new mosque ²². Whereas Ibn al-FāriḌ's shrine had been in the southeastern corner of the older structure, his grave was incorporated into the middle of the northwestern wall of Ğamīla's mosque. Ibn al-FāriḌ's shrine, then, is no longer situated on the qibla side of the mosque but, rather, opposite the mihrāb and pulpit which date from Ğamīla's reconstruction. Ğamīla also had a wood frame erected over the grave and this, in turn, bears her original and successive kiswas, ceremonial shrouds commemorating Ibn al-FāriḌ's mawlid (Pl. 2). The roof of this newer mosque is made of wooden beams and supported by four octagonal stone pillars. Ğamīla's mosque for Ibn al-FāriḌ is a small one and lacks the gallery observed by al-Nābuluṣī in the original structure; other structures were not rebuilt. On the shrine side, the mosque opens into a spacious courtyard where ablutions are made and which may have been the site of the earlier mosque and zāwiya.

Though rebuilt late in the eighteen hundreds, Ibn al-FāriḌ's mosque has languished, through this century with little monetary support. As elsewhere in the modern world, a more secular scientific education has led many in Egypt to regard the saints and their cults as bearers of ignorance and superstition. This view gained the support of many reform minded religious authorities and, so, both the numerous pilgrims and generous financial resources that once graced the shrine have rapidly declined ²³. By

21. 'Alī Mubārak, 5:59.

22. See the report of the Comité, Comité de conservation des monuments de l'art arabe 5 (1887-1888), p. 61, and Louis Massignon in Revue des conférences française en orient 11 (janvier, 1938), p. 36. and Ḥilmī, p. 55. Sadly, the Comité permitted Ğamīla Hānim to remove the original structures surrounding Ibn al-FāriḌ's shrine because they considered them to be of no artistic importance. Su'ād Māhir, Masāğid Miṣr wa-awliyā'uhā al-šāliḥūn (Cairo : Maṭābi' al-'Ahrām al-Tiğāriya, 1976), 2:212, incorrectly ascribes the present mosque to 'Alī Bāy, not to Ğamīla Hānim.

23. See Louis Massignon, "La cité des morts au Caire," in Opera Minora (Paris : Presses Universitaires de France, 1969), 3 : 271, and Ernest Bannerth, Islamische Wallfahrtsstätten Kairos (Wiesbaden : O. Harrassowitz, 1973), p. 58-60.

the 1960's, the mawlid was no longer held, but interest in Ibn al-Fāriḍ and his shrine was renewed by a branch of the Rifā'iya Ṣūfī order which held a weekly session at the mosque²⁴.

After years of petitioning the Rifā'i caretaker of the shrine, Ṣayḥ Ġād, was finally given permission by the Ministry of Awqāf to hold again the mawlid beginning in 1981. This annual event has brought new revenues used to improve the shrine and its mosque which have been painted. A public address system and fans have been installed, and an ablution area with a water tank, a basin and latrines was constructed in the courtyard. A cement and metal awning was then erected below the dome and adjoining the shrine to shade pilgrims wishing to pray by the tomb in the courtyard (Pl. 1, 3). To what extent the mawlid and these renovations mark a renaissance of Ibn al-Fāriḍ's saintly reputation remains to be seen but, clearly, his shrine has not been forgotten²⁵.

24. See F. De Jong's review of Bannerth in Journal of Semitic Studies 21 (1976), p. 235.

25. I would like to thank Nora Walter for photographs 1-2, 5, and Stephen M. Goodman for photographs 3-4. I would also like to thank the late Ṣayḥ Ġād, his wife Na'ima, and their oldest son 'Umar for their invaluable assistance and kindness at the shrine. I am also grateful to the Binational Fulbright Commission for their support in 1983-1984, 1988-1989, and to Dr. Ayman Fu'ād, Arab League Manuscript Institute, and Dr. Aḥmad Haridī for their comments on an earlier draft of this paper.

The Domed Shrine.

The Dome. Detail.

Mihrāb and Minbar.
Detail.

In the Shrine.

The Court yard.