Comments

Lease contracts are few among the finds of the excavations. There are many reasons, one of them is the fragile nature of the papyri or papers and the Arab tribes' traditions of living in an independent house for each family and tending not to share with strangers. According to Yūsuf Rāgib, very few rent contracts among papyri collections have already been published.<sup>1</sup> The quality of the calligraphy of this text, compared with the others, shows that it was executed by a professional hand which did not care about details such as letters' shapes, dots, and separation of certain Arabic letters which ought to be separated. These reflect this type of daily life text. The clerks who were used to work for Royal dynasties had to be chosen from the very elite and their calligraphic texts ought to be very elegant "in order to prevent any critic and not to find anything to criticize".<sup>2</sup>

This contract had been issued on the eleventh of Rağab, year 567 A.H. (1172 A.D.) seven months after the death of al-Ādīd, the last Caliph of the Fatimid dynasty, on the tenth of Al-Muḥarram, 567 A.H.<sup>3</sup> In the Arabic language, there are two verbs to express "rent", "أَكْرَى - akra" and "أَجْرَى - aġġara". Here, the scribe has chosen the second one, for it was also favoured in the Holy Coran,<sup>4</sup> although the first term was widely used in the early Islamic era.<sup>5</sup> The names of the lease-holder and the renter were mentioned at the forehead of the deed, with very wide description of the lease-holder which seems to be according to the Coranic longest verse which insists on an explanation of all details, especially regarding the debt contracts.<sup>6</sup>

No surname concerning certain tribe was mentioned. From the huge majority of the tombstones' names, we can see how important that is to mention tribes' names.<sup>7</sup> Fustāt itself was divided among the tribes which came from the Arab peninsula while a certain quarter was dedicated to the Egyptians of various factions to live in,<sup>8</sup> being allowed also to build religious buildings such as churches and a synagogue. This tradition has been respected but not for ever. Through the excavation of Gayraud, we are sure that both the Arab tribes and the Egyptians had been interlaced and mixed at very early periods. We have found papyri written in Arabic and Coptic obviously made by people who are eager to learn Arabic.<sup>9</sup>

Here the surname of one of them expresses the young man's profession not tribe.<sup>10</sup>

Mentioning the "middle storey" means that the house contained at least three storeys. This supports what the travellers had said about the houses of Fustat, although Bahgat rejected the idea of the presence of more than one storey,<sup>11</sup> but he accepted that some houses may have had two storeys.<sup>12</sup> Here we can be sure that this house had at least three storeys as it was clearly mentioned in line 10 “the third storey”. I am convinced that some houses had four storeys because we found in our excavations since 1988 rough pieces of plasters retaining the impression of palm branches which I think were used then as upper walls for the ultimate storey beside using them for roofs.<sup>13</sup>

At line 6 he mentioned “Fusṭāṭ-Miṣr”, “Miṣr” is the Arabic—even the Semitic—name of Egypt. The two terms’ roots are different. The Arabic term “Miṣr” means “boundary” or “frontier” or “limit”.<sup>14</sup> This came from the Arabian point of view about Egypt and its presence at the western limit of the Arabian peninsula. By the way, there are many theories about the word “Egypt”. The more widely accepted one is that the word “Egypt” came from the ancient Egyptian term “ht-kȝ-Ptah” which means “the temple of God Ptah in Memphis”.

Prof. Saleh advocates the ancient Egyptian word “agby”  which means the “floodplain”.<sup>15</sup> I humbly suggest that the term “Egypt” is coming directly from the ancient Egyptian two words: “Geb-ta”. Geb is the name of the god of earth in the ancient Egyptian mythology. “Ta” means “land” or “earth”. So, Egypt is the land of God Geb. I confess that this conjunctive term is upside down for the ancient Egyptian used to say “ta-Geb” not “Geb-ta” to express the “land of Geb”, beside the simple conversion of  kmt (the ancient name of Egypt) into gpt and then Egypt.

At line 7 and the end of 6, it was mentioned that the house is located at the “blocked alley” lit. the “unpassable alley”. The recent excavations of the very early houses of Fusṭāṭ near İstabl ‘Antar,<sup>16</sup> prove the nature of the houses of Fusṭāṭ reflected by this contract. Streets were narrow and curved, some of them were blocked. The city of “Al-Qaṣr” in the Dakhla Oasis is very similar to Fusṭāṭ of the Middle Ages.<sup>17</sup>

At the same line word “Al-Qādī” means the judge was mentioned. At the end of the Fatimid, the Ayyubid, and the Mamluk eras, this title did not necessarily mean the profession, but it was also used as an honorary title for religious scholars, State employees and the important scribes.<sup>18</sup>

At line 8, phrase “dedicated to the fountain” reflects the fact that most of the houses of Fusṭāṭ excavated by Bahgat or Gayraud had a fountain or more each. Some of those fountains were for water to refresh the air of the court, some to breed fishes,<sup>19</sup> and others to be used as an open bath “ḥammām”.

From line 9 to 13, the period and the rent of the lease were mentioned. The period was six months from Rağab the eleventh, 567 A.H. to Al-Muḥarram the tenth, 568 A.H. (February 16th, 1172 A.D. to August the 13th, 1172 A.D.). This seems to be done according to the Islamic law which insists on describing in certain words both the period and the rent.<sup>20</sup>

According to Islamic law market's prices must not be fixed, but it must be left to supply and demand.<sup>21</sup> During the era of Al-Mustansir—the Fatimid Caliph who ruled from 427 A.H.-1036 A.D. to 487 A.H.-1094 A.D., Nāṣir Ḥusraw—a Persian traveller—said that the Caliph owned no less than twenty thousand shops for rent in the capital, most of them rented for ten dinars each per month. He had also eight thousand rooms for rent in Cairo and Fustāt. Those were beside baths and other buildings.<sup>22</sup> We should not forget the exaggeration of this saying because both the traveller and the Caliph relate to the same šī'ā faction of Islam. In this text, the rent fee is not clear because words are unclear at that part. Maybe it was six (or sixty) dirhams. The stability of coins at that period was not sure and even chaotic after a very long period of famine. In the year 1199 A.D., according to Fustāt's documents of Geniza,<sup>23</sup> the daily wage of the laborer (a mason) was 5 dirhams plus a lunch meal worth 1,25 dirham.

In the year 1183 A.D., a laborer with two other workers received 10 dirhams, the laborer's wage was 5 of that amount. According to a long account from Abū-Ṣir (Būṣir), written around 1045 A.D., the daily wage of a skilled worker was six dirhams. The value of coins during the era of Saladin was thirteen dirhams and one third of dirham for each dinar.<sup>24</sup> A teacher was employed for forty dinars per month, which means 534 dirhams per month. Because of the above mentioned facts, and concerning the reading, I can advocate neither "six" nor "sixty" for the value of the rent.<sup>25</sup>

The first word of line 13 means silver (lit. ورق wariq). It was mentioned once in the Holy Coran.<sup>26</sup> More widely used to express silver in Arabic is "فضة fidda". The scribe had described the silver which ought to be paid, as of good quality which means that there was silver of bad quality at the market. That looks normal at that time with the collapse of the Fatimid dynasty. The contract insists that the rent value is to be paid at the end of the Arabian month not at the beginning.

Line 14 insists that this agreement must be executed, which means no one has the right to violate it and the renter has received what he has rented and he had the right to use it during the whole period of the contract.

Line 15 mentions that this agreement had been done after examination, satisfaction, and parting of the two persons. Something else was mentioned, that was the "guarantee of indemnity". An indemnity system was common during various Islamic eras. Policemen were used to wander around streets to protect houses and shops.<sup>27</sup> They were called "جنه asas", lit. "the secret police wandering at night". Sometimes they had to inform about the wine makers and chase them following the grapes' carriers.<sup>28</sup>

The witnesses of the scribe come at line 16. The following line includes the date and registers that a pen mistake has happened and was corrected. At the following line (18), another witness was mentioned concerning the correction of the pen mistake.

The name of the scribe comes at the final line.
