The Icon Writer Hanna al-Armani according to an Ottoman Legal Document

HANNA AL-ARMANI (John the Armenian)<sup>1</sup> is a celebrated writer<sup>2</sup> of icons from the XVIII century. Previously studied by art historians,<sup>3</sup> in this article, it is his private life that is examined in order to help further iconographic studies.

A document from Ottoman times, lists a certain “Hanna son of Artin, son of Karabid of Jerusalem, the Armenian painter.” This document is dated the 6 Jourmadah 1200 E.H. (3 March 1786 A.D.).<sup>4</sup> This person can be identified as the writer of icons, Hanna al-Armani for several reasons: the name Hanna Karabid of Jerusalem is mentioned on icons;<sup>5</sup> the date corresponds to the end of the career of Hanna al-Armani 1783 A.D.; and there were no beaux-arts (fine arts) painters at the time.

As there are no icons in Armenian Churches, it is only by comparing two icons of the archangel Michael in the church of Haret Zuweila—Cairo,<sup>6</sup> that we are able to demonstrate that Hanna al-Armani learned his art from Ibrahim al-Nasikh (Abraham the scribe).

From the Ottoman document, we learn that Hanna al-Armani did not have a profession other than writing icons which is unusual because Ibrahim, his master, was also a scribe and others were priests such as Mencorius (Coptic Museum n° 18) and Cyril (Coptic Museum n° 29).<sup>7</sup>

The author of this article is indebted to Mr Stuart Hibberd who corrected the English text and suggested changes to the presentation.

For another point of view, cf. O. Meinardus, “Über den Armenischen Ursprung der Kynocephaloi-Ikone in Koptischen Museum zu Alt-Kairo,” Journal of Coptic Studies II, 1992, p. 91-98.

As the document mentions Hanna al-Armani is of Armenian origin but he came from Jerusalem. Hanna married twice. His first wife was Armenian. She bore two sons and a daughter: Artin, Giris and Monkechah respectively.

His second wife Damiana, was a Coptic woman.<sup>8</sup> daughter of George (Giris) the Dhimmi,<sup>9</sup> the Christian goldsmith of Darb al-Ginînah in the lane of al-Qantara al-Gidîdah. The fact that Hanna al-Armani married such a wealthy Copt suggests that he was accepted by Coptic society.

The document notes that his residence was in Darb al-Ginînah in the lane al-Qantara al-Gidîdah. This street is close to the old Coptic cathedral of Izbakiyah. The district was predominantly Christian in makeup, which is a further indication of the extent to which Hanna had been integrated into Coptic Egyptian society.<sup>10</sup>

The extant works of Hanna al-Armani show that he was an icon writer of great ability, yet despite this the Ottoman document reveals that Hanna was very poor and his son Artin, son had to care for him and his wife towards the end of Hanna's life. Although the fact that he had no other occupation, unlike other icon writers of the period (see above), suggests he was able to make a reasonable living from his work.

The document that is published here for the first time, provides some interesting personal information on one of the most notable icon writers in the Coptic Church.

1. Hanna al-Armani was still living in 1786 A.D.
2. He married twice, his first wife was probably Armenian and his second was Coptic, and had two sons and a daughter from his first marriage.
3. He did not have an occupation other than writing icons and that was not lucrative.
4. One can suppose that his workshop was in the district of Izbakiah, while Ibrahîm, his master, had his workshop in Haret al-Rûm.<sup>11</sup>
