

ANNALES ISLAMOLOGIQUES

en ligne en ligne

AnIsl 41 (2007), p. 31-40

István Vasary

On the Periphery of the Islamic World : Diplomatic Correspondence of the Nogays with the Russians

Conditions d'utilisation

L'utilisation du contenu de ce site est limitée à un usage personnel et non commercial. Toute autre utilisation du site et de son contenu est soumise à une autorisation préalable de l'éditeur (contact AT ifao.egnet.net). Le copyright est conservé par l'éditeur (Ifao).

Conditions of Use

You may use content in this website only for your personal, noncommercial use. Any further use of this website and its content is forbidden, unless you have obtained prior permission from the publisher (contact AT ifao.egnet.net). The copyright is retained by the publisher (Ifao).

Dernières publications

9782724711622	BIFAO 126
9782724711059	Les Inscriptions de visiteurs dans les Tombes thébaines	Chloé Ragazzoli
9782724711455	Les émotions dans l'Égypte Ancienne	Rania Y. Merzeban (éd.), Marie-Lys Arnette (éd.), Dimitri Laboury, Cédric Larcher
9782724711639	AnIsl 60
9782724711448	Athribis XI	Marcus Müller (éd.)
9782724711615	Le temple de Dendara X. Les chapelles osiriennes	Sylvie Cauville, Oussama Bassiouni, Matjaž Kačun, Bernard Lenthéric
9782724711707	????? ?????????? ??????? ???? ?? ???????	Omar Jamal Mohamed Ali, Ali al-Sayyid Abdelatif
???	????? ?? ??????? ??????? ?? ????????? ?????????????
????????????	???????????? ??????? ??????? ?? ??? ??????? ??????;

On the Periphery of the Islamic World

Diplomatic Correspondence of the Nogays with the Russians

THOUGH the Nogay ulus (appanage), one of the successor states of the Golden Horde, was widely acknowledged as a separate Tatar political entity only in the second half of the 15th century, its formation began much earlier. The core of this Turco-Mongol confederation was the Mangit tribe which by the end of the 14th century became one of the most significant ethnic and military component of the Golden Horde under the leadership of Edigü, famous military commander and chief of that tribe. The tribes subjected to Edigü and his successors' jurisdiction, occupied a vast territory between the Yayik (Ural) and Lower Volga river, their centre being the capital city of Saraychik on the Yayik. In the 15th-16th centuries the Nogay Horde was a significant Tatar state comprising various Turco-Mongolian tribes which later took an active part in the formation of numerous modern Turkic peoples, including the Kazaks, the Karakalpaks, the Bashkirs and the Kazan and Crimean Tatars. The widest extension of the Nogay Horde was in the first half of the 16th century, when its historical role was at its zenith, and they actively participated in the wars of Muscovy, the Kazan and the Crimean Khanates.¹

From the middle of the 13th century onward, when the Russian principalities were subjugated by the Tatars and forced to pay tribute to their new overlords, the Russians have had direct diplomatic contact with the Tatar state of the Golden Horde. Dispatching and receiving envoys became daily routine of the princes, later the grand princes of Moscow who acquired all the necessary diplomatic skills through their daily dealings with the Tatars of the Horde.

1. For a short overview of the Nogays, see Vásáry, "Noghay"; for a detailed monograph, see Trepavlov, Istoriia.

By Grand Prince Ivan III's time (1462-1505) the Muscovite state was fully equipped with all the tricks and techniques of steppe diplomacy.² The beginnings of written diplomatic documentation and the roots of the institutional foundation of the diplomatic affairs, also go back to the reign of Ivan III.³ First, the Kazennyi dvor and its chief, the kaznachei were in charge of diplomatic affairs, but in 1549 a separate state organ, the Posol'skii Prikaz, one of the best-founded institutions of the Muscovite state came into being and took over their duty. With its enormous written material, the documents of the Posol'skii Prikaz, now preserved in the Rossiiskii Gosudarstvennyi Arkhiv Drevnikh Aktov (henceforth RGADA), constitute the basic source material for the foreign policy and diplomacy of Muscovy. Questions of diplomacy were also dealt with in the Boiarskaia Duma, the Kazna and the Dvoretz. The chief administrators of the Posol'skii Prikaz were the secretary-scribes (d'iaki and pod'iachie), the seal-keepers (pechatniki), the bailiffs (pristavy), and the interpreters and translators (tolmachi and perevodchiki). The significance of this vast material concerning the foreign policy and diplomacy of the Muscovite state was recognised by Russian historians and excellent works were written on the theme. Suffice it to mention Belokurov's monograph on the Posol'skii Prikaz,⁴ and Savva's directory of the clerks of the same institution in the 16th century.⁵ In the pre-revolutionary decades several volumes of documents were published that treated the diplomatic material with different countries. One of the early pioneering enterprises was N.I. Novikov's undertaking to publish the Nogay material (nogaïskie dela) in five volumes, in the series 'Continuation of the Old Russian Library'.⁶ Later, most text editions were published in the excellent series of the Sbornik Imperatorskogo Russkogo istoricheskogo obshchestva (SIRIO). The edition of Turkish, Crimean Tatar and Nogay materials was especially relevant and significant in this respect.⁷ After the revolution of 1917, for decades this topic was rather neglected, and it was only 25 years ago, in 1979, that research into and publication of the so-called posol'skie knigi began anew, within the framework of cooperation between the Institute of History of the USSR (from 1992: Institute of Russian History) at the Academy of Sciences of the USSR (from 1992: Russian Academy of Sciences) and the State Archives (TsGADA, since 1992: RGADA).

The quantity of the posol'skie knigi and the documentary material of the foreign policy in general is in direct proportion with the significance of a state or polity for the Muscovite state. We can trace the number of the envoys' books from different contemporary catalogues (opisi in Russian), thus in the 15th century the following volumes of the posol'skie knigi concerning the Tatar states were to be found: Nogay Horde (1 book), Crimean Khanate (2 books); the correspondence with the Kazan Khanate is missing because later this material of the archives was burnt down. By 1549, when the famous d'iak I.M. Viskovatyi became head of the Posol'skii Prikaz, the number of envoys' books considerably increased in the Tsarskii Arkhiv where all state documents were preserved: Turkey (1 book), Nogay Horde (3 books),

2. Keenan, "Muscovy and Kazan", p. 548-558.

3. Croskey, Muscovite Diplomatic Practice.

4. Belokurov, O Posol'skom prikaze.

5. Savva, D'iaki i pod'iachie.

6. PDRV, Parts 7-II, St Petersburg, 1791-1801.

7. Pamiatniki diplomaticheskikh snoshenii (SIRIO 41, 91).

Crimean Khanate (9 books). By 1605 the increase of the material is even more susceptible: Turkey (3 books), Nogay Horde (10 books), Crimean Khanate (21 books).⁸ The quantity of envoys' books displays a clear-cut picture of Muscovy's changing foreign relations before 1613, the date of the enthronement of the new Romanov dynasty. If one considers that in the first half of the 16th century the contacts with the Kazan and Astrakhan Khanates were vitally important in Russia's foreign policy, it is rather strange that Kazan and Astrakhan are missing from this impressive list of Oriental foreign partners. But everything becomes obvious if we know that contrary to appearance Muscovy in fact conducted intensive correspondence with these Tatar states. After the Russian capture of Kazan (1552) and Astrakhan (1555) the diplomatic material concerning these two khanates was allocated in the newly found Prikaz Kazanskogo dvortsa, which became the central organ in the Russian administration of the two conquered khanates. After the conquest of the Siberian Khanate, the administration of Siberian matters was also attached to this prikaz, but later in 1637 a separate organisation, the Sibirskii Prikaz took over the administration of Siberia.⁹ But alas, the early material of the Prikaz Kazanskogo dvortsa dating before 1626, was demolished by fire, so the written records of the Kazan and Astrakhan envoys' books all perished. Only some traces of these contacts can be found in the Crimean Tatar and Nogay diplomatic material.

The Posol'skie knigi constitute only a part of the precious diplomatic materials of Muscovy. In the archives a lot more has been preserved since all materials of a Russian diplomatic mission, be it outgoing (ot'ezdy) or incoming (priezdy), were preserved separately in the so-called stolbtsy (columns). This material comprises all diplomatic correspondence, diplomas, texts of treaties, envoys' instructions (nakazy), memoranda (pamjat'), accounts (stateinye spiski), translations to and from different languages, etc. This composite material was then edited in the form of posol'skie knigi, but later, especially in the 17th century most of them remained in the form of stolbets. Now, basing on the combined evidence of the posol'skie knigi and the material preserved in stolbtsy, it seems instructive to have a look at the date of the first documents of the relevant material in question. The written contacts with the Crimea began in 1474, with the Nogay Horde in 1489, and with Turkey in 1496. It becomes evident that at the beginning of the 17th century, on the eve of the great anarchy (smuta), Russia had ever intensifying contacts with a wide range of countries in the Orient. Between 1500 and 1600, in one hundred years Muscovite Russia conquered three Tatar khanates (Kazan, Astrakhan and Siberia) thereby opening the gates of Siberia toward the East and keeping the lower Volga region under her firm control. But while Russian expansion to the East in Siberia was rather smooth, since no states of Russia's dimension could halt Russia's imperial drive, in the southern steppe zone the Nogays and especially the Crimean Tatars were still virulent and manipulated by the Ottoman power, they often hindered the Russian plans.

8. For a description of the characteristics of the envoys' books prior to 1605, see Rogozhin, Posol'skie knigi Rossii, p. 181-183.

9. Putevoditel' I, p. 220, 227-228.

The diplomatic correspondence of the Tatar states, among them the Nogays, with the Muscovite state, constitutes a real treasure for historical research. Especially for the functioning of Tatar chancelleries, and the diplomatic practice of the Tatar states the Russian source material is of primary importance since most of the original Tatar documents perished in the historical vicissitudes. This time I will call attention to the Nogay diplomatic practice and correspondence with the Russians as reflected in the material of the RGADA.

As mentioned above, the Nogay material can be found in fond 127 (Nogaiskie dela) of the RGADA. There are 10 envoy books in the timespan 1489-1582,¹⁰ but after that date the next, eleventh volume of the Nogay envoy books was compiled in 1642, so for sixty years only the registers on columns (stolbtsy) have come down to us. The envoy books, all written in Russian, are the end products of a deliberate editing work of the secretaries of the Posol'skii prikaz, and they contain no original documents since after the completion of an envoy book the material used for its compilation was annihilated. Consequently, they are secondary, though very precious historical sources. On the other hand, the stolbtsy (registers written on oblong pieces of paper) are primary sources that preserved all the original registers and documents, among others the Tatar diplomas and notes.

Moscow's first registered contact with the Nogay Horde dates from September 1489 (6998) when Prince Khovanskii, governor-general (namestnik) of Murom reports to Grand Prince Ivan Vasil'evich (Ivan III) of Moscow on the arrival of three Nogay envoys with a delegation of 22 people: Čumğur (Chiumgur) arrived from Ibrāhīm (Ivak), Adik from Mūṣā murza and Tuvač (Tuvach') from Yamğurči (Iamğurchei) murza.¹¹ The texts of the documents are given in their Russian translations done by the Tatar translators of the Posol'skii prikaz, with the introductory words: Ivakova tsareva gramota, Musina myrzina gramota, etc.¹² Then the Russian sovereign's responses (otvety) are given that were orally transmitted to the Nogay envoys through the representatives of the Grand Prince, and a Russian delegation was designated, the envoy of which was to hand over the sovereign's written responses to the Nogay bey and the murza-s. The Nogay and Russian envoys went back together to the Nogays, and after the presentation of the documents and the official meetings, one round of the diplomatic exchange was over. On the basis of the envoy books and the columns, one can gain a relatively complete picture of the history of Nogay-Russian diplomatic exchange, with the names of envoys, the tasks and results of the missions and a detailed list of diplomatic correspondence can also be reconstructed. Though Russian researchers, among them, B.-A.B. Kochekaev in his treatise on the history of the Russo-Nogay contacts, and especially V.V. Trepavlov in his basic monograph on Nogay history,¹³ heavily drew on and utilised the material of the Posol'skii prikaz,

10. RGADA, f. 127, op. 1, d. 1-10 (vol. 1: 1489-1509; vol. 2: 1533-1538; vol. 3: 1548-1550; vol. 4: 1551-1556; vol. 5: 1557-1561; vol. 6: 1561-1564; vol. 7: 1564-1566; vol. 8: 1577-1579; vol. 9: 1579-1581; vol. 10: 1581-1582). – For a description of the contents of these books, see Rogozhin, Posol'skie knigi Rossii, p. 143-147.

11. Lukichev, Rogozhin (ed.), Posol'skaia kniga 1489-1508, p. 17.

12. Lukichev, Rogozhin (ed.), Posol'skaia kniga 1489-1508, p. 18.

13. Kochekaev, Nogaisko-russkie otnosheniia; Trepavlov, Istoriia.

a systematic and minute compilation of a year-to-year chronicle and the prosopography of the Nogay-Russian diplomatic contacts, that would form the historic skeleton of any further research into the Nogays, cannot be evaded.

I would like to demonstrate on one single example what I mean by a systematic compilation. Let us take again the first year of the Nogay-Russian contacts as our starting point.¹⁴ The Nogay delegation arrived to Murom in September 1489 and were received at the court in Moscow, in November. In August 1490 the next turn of Nogay envoys appeared in Moscow. The Nogays generally came to Moscow toward August-September, and after a one to three months' stay they were sent back to their mandators (the Nogay bey, the murza-s and the princes, or a member of their families) together with the Russian envoys, amongst whom one can frequently see Tatars in Russian service. The next delegation arrived again toward the end of next summer. The first Nogay delegation in 1489 brought five diplomas (gramoty) with them issued by different persons but all addressed to the Grand Prince Ivan III. The Tatar originals were translated into Russian, and the translations were later incorporated into the Posol'skie knigi (a ce c mex zramom cnucku). The diplomas were issued by Ibrāhīm (Ibak/Breim tsar'), Shibanid sovereign of the Siberian yurt who nine years before (1480) crushed Akhmad Khan of the Golden Horde, three Nogay murza-s, Mūsā (Musa), Yamğurčī (Iamgurchei) and Talač (Talach), and Yamğurčī's wife, Saltānim (Saltanym). Each Tatar diploma was brought and handed over by different persons, mandatories of the Tatar principals. They were titled envoys (posol) if sent by Tatar sovereigns, and dobryi chelovek or sluga if sent by murza-s or other mandators. In the present case Prince Čumğur, Adik, Prince Tuvač, Belezh and El'iakshei were the mandatories. In addition, as a rule the names of the Tatar scribes who compiled the diplomas are mentioned at the end of the documents. Thus, Ibrāhīm employed Qul-derviř bağşı (Kulderbysh bakshei), Mūsā's scribe was Molla Muḥammad bağşı (molna Magamet bakshei), and Yamğurčī's scribe was Molla Abūbaktir bağşı (molna Abekir bakshei). By this time, most of the scribes (bağşı) who originally were experts of the Uighur literacy in the Golden Horde,¹⁵ were recruited, as can be seen from their titles, from the learned Muslim mollas. Sometimes, interpreters (tolmachi) were also attached to the delegations, thus in the file under discussion Mūsā sent his servant Seydek (Seitiak) in this capacity. In addition, five members of the Tatar delegation (Alkazyi, Begish, Utesh', Chet and Kaisym Segit) are mentioned by name, and the Russian official in charge of the provision of the Nogay delegation was pod'iachii Iushko Andreev. So, the number of persons occurring in this single act, encompassing only a few pages in the Posol'skie knigi, amounts altogether to twenty-one. Some of these persons regularly occur in the envoys' books and also in other contemporary sources, some of them are mentioned only once, in connection with a registered event. For any essential progress in historical research, it would be a task of pivotal importance to compile a Nogay-Tatar prosopography based

14. The texts of the Posol'skie knigi relating to this year can be found in Lukichev, Rogozhin (ed.), Posol'skaia kniga 1489-1508, p. 17-20; Kel'dasov et al., Posol'skie knigi 1489-1549 gg., p. 18-21.

15. For the survival of Uighur literacy, see Vásáry, "Bemerkungen zum uigurischen Schrifttum".

primarily on the Russian Posol'skie knigi, with the inclusion of all other relevant sources. Till that time our research will not surpass the level of ad hoc investigations lacking the necessary support of primary sources.

Similarly, the compilation and edition of the documents of the Nogay-Russian diplomatic correspondence would serve as the basis for any further, diplomatic and stylistic, analysis of these documents. For the compilation of this corpus of Nogay-Russian correspondence one must be aware how the exchange of letters was performed in the Nogay and Russian chancelleries respectively. Let us begin with the Nogay party: the letters of the Nogay bey were written in the capital, Saraychik while the various murza-s prepared their letters in their temporary stays during their nomadisations. All Nogay documents were written by the Tatar secretaries termed bahşı or abiz (ḥāfiẓ),¹⁶ with Arabic letters in the Eastern Turkic (Turkī) literary idiom heavily imbued with the Kipchak idiom spoken by the Nogays. These original Tatar diplomas, having been handed over in the Russian court, were immediately translated into Russian by the Tatar secretaries in the Kazennyi dvor, from 1549 onward in the Posol'skii prikaz. The Russians had centuries-old experiences in handling Tatar texts, since they had, after all, regular correspondence with the khans of the Golden Horde for almost 250 years. These Tatar secretaries, who were obviously bilingual and mastered both languages (Tatar and Russian) perfectly, used a peculiar Russian language in translating the Tatar originals. They created a special chancellery language which was based on a verbatim Russian translation of the Tatar texts, full of loan translations (calques).¹⁷ Sometimes these Russian chancellery translations are baffling and may seem incorrect and obscure, moreover unintelligible to modern readers, but they are painstakingly precise in following their Tatar originals. So if one knows the original Tatar phrase the Russian translation or calque becomes at once intelligible.¹⁸ E.g. the Russian translations слово то стоит or *слово наше то*¹⁹ are renderings of Tatar forms such as söz olkim and sözümüz ol turur.

Once the envoy books had been compiled, the Tatar originals of the documents were not preserved any longer. The sad consequence of this habit can clearly be seen in the documents of the RGADA: from the first hundred years of Nogay-Russian contacts (1489-1586) only the Russian translations have come down to us, no piece of an original Nogay document was preserved. It is only among the stolbtsy that occasionally original Tatar documents crop up. These Nogay-Tatar documents of the 16th-17th centuries have been untackled by previous scholarship, practically none of them are published.²⁰ I had the opportunity to look through

16. For these terms, see Vásáry, Az Arany Horda kancelláriája, p. 33-36.

17. For the Russian chancellery language of the 17th century, see recently Kortava, Moskovskii prikaznyi jazyk.

18. For some of the Tatars calques in Russian, see Golden, "Turkic calques"; among them he treats two terms from the Tataro-Mongol era (p. 108-111), namely pomy numu 'to take [lit. to drink] an oath' from Turkic ant ič- and целом буму 'to beat with the forehead' from Turkic baş ur- 'to hit the head', both meaning 'to apply, petition'.

19. RGADA, f. 127, op. 1, posol'skaia kniga 1489-1508, ff. 17r,v; 29r,v (Kel'dasov et al., Posol'skie knigi 1489-1549 gg, p. 33, 34, 45, 46).

20. Only three documents were mentioned and partly published by the late Kazan Tatar scholar, Mustafa Nogman whose works remained largely the Nogay material of RGADA (Nogaiskie dela: fond 127, opis' 1) on several occasions and selected more than forty documents and notes for publication. Most documents are written in Turkic, but there are a few also in Persian, all of them supplied with a contemporary Russian translation. I plan the edition of this archival material which will obviously shed new light on the functioning of Nogay chancelleries.

In sum, the list of the Nogay-Russian diplomatic correspondence will consist of Tatar and Russian documents, from the time span of hundred-and-seventy years (1489-1659). In fortunate cases both the Tatar documents and their contemporary Russian translations are there, but for the most part only the Russian translations have come down to us. But even in the latter case, the sense of the original Tatar diplomas can fully be established on the basis of the bilingual documents. For the demonstration of what has been said so far let me present a hitherto unpublished short Nogay document and its contemporary Russian translation. It is a very short account of two Nogay murza-s, Jan-Muḥammad and Mamay sent to their fellow, Uraq murza, in 1626. It contains nothing else but a short report on their welfare and satisfaction with the Russian tsar's protective care. It runs as follows²¹:

1. Yraq yerdin yaqın köñül birlä Jan-Muḥammad murza
2. Mamay murzadın köpdin köp du'â sâlâm.
3. Uraq murzağa söz olkim: Ulu pādšāh
4. yaḥşılığıdın, kenazlar yaḥşı-
5. lığdın ḥalqımız ilimiz, qaraçılarımız
6. esän amanımız, böläk sâlâm
7. yebärürmiz, könlümüz ḥoşdur.

Its Russian translation is the following²²:

Перевод з грамоты ногайского Янмаметь мурзы, пишет к брату своему к Урак мурзе.

Из дального места ближнею мыслью от Янмаметь мурзы да от Мамаи мурзы ото многа много с молитвою поклон. Урак мурзе слово то есть. По государевской милости и по княжей доброте наши люди и улусы и карачеи в добром здорovie, с челобитьем поминки к тебе пришлем.

unnoticed even in Russian scholarship. First, he published a Tatar letter of the Moscow boyars from 1613 in which they inform Ishterek bey and the Nogay murza-s about the election of the new Tsar Mikhail Fedorovich Romanov (Nogman, "Mäskäü boiarlary"; Nogman, Kul'iazma süzleklär, p. 14-15). Later, Nogmanov partly published two Nogay documents: a letter from Ali murza, son of Uraq from 1629 and a letter of the Nogay murza-s from 1632 to the voyvode and princes of Astrakhan (only the photograph and transcription in Arabic letters) (Nogman, Iske tatar jazuy ürnäkläre, p. 204-205, 206-207).

21. RGADA, f. 127, op. 1, 1626, No. 1, f. 104.

22. RGADA, f. 127, op. 1, 1626, No. 1, f. 105.

The English translation of the Turkic text is as follows:

(1-2) From a remote land with a near [= warm] heart, Jan-Muhammad murza and Mamay murza send their prayers and regards. (3) To Uraq murza their report is as follows: (4) Because of the benevolence of the Great Sovereign and the Princes, (5) our people and our illustrious chiefs (6) are in good health and peace, [and] we are sending (7) our presents and regards [to you], with our hearts satisfied.

This short document may present the character and style of these documents. They are simple, straightforward in their wording, but full of stereotyped forms, rendered literally by the Russian translations. Let me refer to some of these phrases: yıraq yerdin yaqın köñül birlä ‘from a remote land with a near [= warm] heart’ translated into Russian as ‘из дальнего места ближнюю мыслью’, is a well-known stylistic locution in Tatar diplomas, it also occurs as ‘из дальние земли ближнюю мыслью’.²³ Similarly, the phrase ‘тяжёлый поклон с лёгким поминком’ frequently occurs in the diplomas,²⁴ it is the translation of Turkic ağır sālām yinil böläk birlä ‘heavy greetings with light presents’. The latter Turkic phrase occurs, e.g. in Aḥmad Khan’s letter sent to the Ottoman Sultan Mehmed the Conqueror in 1477.²⁵ Another typical Tatar phrase, expressing a contact of inferiority-superiority, was Pādšāhnın uzun qolumın üstindä bolğan idük, özimiz qul bolğan idük ‘we were under the long arms of the Sovereign [i.e. under the jurisdiction of the Tsar] and were his servants’, its Russian translation was ‘под государевою долгою рукою были и мы сами холопи были’.²⁶

In think the publication of the above short Nogay document and the presentation of three Tatar stereotyped phrases with their contemporary Russian translations could render palpable the problems one may come across in studying these documents. The edition of these Nogay-Tatar diplomas, together with their contemporary Russian translations, accompanied by a thorough philological and historical analysis will certainly provide basic material for a new understanding of the chancellery of the Nogay Hordes, a hitherto neglected and less-known chapter of the post-Golden Horde period in the 16th-17th centuries.

23. E.g. in RGADA, f. 127, op. 1, posol’skaia kniga 1533-1538, f. 182v (Kel’dasov et al., Posol’skie knigi 1489-1549 gg., p. 205).

24. E.g. in RGADA, f. 127, op. 1, posol’skaia kniga 1489-1508, ff. 3rv (Kel’dasov et al., Posol’skie knigi 1489-1549 gg., p. 20).

25. Kurat, Yarlık ve bitikler, p. 49, line 15.

26. RGADA, f. 127, op. 1, 1629, No. 1, f. 321, lines 2-3.

Abbreviations

d.: delo op.: opis' f.: fond PDRV: Prodolzhenie Drevnei Rossiiskoi Vivliofiki. Spb.
 RGADA: Rossiiskii Gosudarstvennyi arkhiv drevnikh aktov. Moscow; prior to 1992 its name was

Tsentral'nyi Gosudarstvennyi arkhiv drevnikh aktov (TsGADA)
 SIRIO: Sbornik Imperatorskogo Russkogo istoricheskogo obshchestva.
 TsGADA see RGADA

Reference list

Primary Sources

- Bennigsen (A.), Boratav (P.N.), Desaive (D.), Lemerrier-Quelquejay (Ch.) (ed.), Le khanat de Crimée dans les archives du musée du palais de Topkapı, Paris, La Haye, 1978.
- Kel'dasov (B.A.), Rogozhin (N.M.), Lykova (E.E.), Lukichev (M.P.) (eds.), Posol'skie knigi po sviaziam Rossii s Nogajskoi Ordoi 1489-1549 gg, Makhachkala, 1995.
- Kurat (A.N.), Topkapı Müzesi Arşivindeki Altın Ordu, Kırım ve Türkistan hanlarına ait yıllık ve bitikler, İstanbul, 1940.
- Lukichev (M.P.), Rogozhin (N.M.) (eds.), Posol'skaia kniga po sviaziam Rossii s Nogajskoi Ordoi 1489-1508 gg, Moscow, 1984.
- Pamiatniki diplomaticheskikh snoshenii Moskovskogo gosudarstva s Krymskoiu i Nogajskoiu ordami i s Turtsieiu, 1474-1521 gg*, St Petersburg, 1884-1885. (SIRIO 41, 91)
- Prodolzhenie Drevnei Rossiiskoi Vivliofiki*.
 St Petersburg 1791. Part 7, p. 225-353; 1792. Part 8, p. 1-33; 1793. Part 9, p. 1-315; 1795. Part 10, p. 1-327; 1801. Part 11, p. 1-315.
- Zaitsev (I.V.), "Pi's'mo khana Bol'shoi Ordy Akhmada turetskomu sultanu Mekhmedu II Fatikhmu (881 g.kh.)", Vostochnyi Arkhiv (Moscow) 2-3, 1999.
- Zimin, A.A. (ed.), Gosudarstvennyi arkhiv Rossii XVI stoletiiia. Opyt rekonstruktsii, Podg. teksta i komment 1-3. Moscow, 1978.

Secondary Sources

- Batmaev (M.M.), Kalmyki v XVII-XVIII vv.: Sobytiia, liudi, byt. Ėlista, 1993.
- Belokurov (S.A.), O Posol'skom prikaze, Moscow, 1906.
- Berezhkov (M.N.), "Drevneishaia kniga krymskikh posol'skikh del (1474-1505 gg.)", Izvestiia Tavricheskoi uchenoi arkhivnoi komissii 21, Simferopol', 1894, p. 27-515.
- Croskey (R.M.), Muscovite Diplomatic Practice in the Reign of Ivan III, New York, 1987.
- Gal'tsov (V.I.), Shmidt (S.O.) (ed.), Opis' arkhiva Posol'skogo prikaza 1626 g., Moscow, 1977.
- Golden (P.B.), "Turkic Calques in Medieval Eastern Slavic", Journal of Turkic Studies 8 (Turks, Hungarians and Kipchaks. A Festschrift in Honor of Tibor Halasi-Kun. Harvard University, 1984), p.103-111.
- Grekov (B.D.), Iakubovskii (A.Iu.), Zolotaia Orda i ego padenie. Moscow-Leningrad, 1950.
- Halperin (Ch.J.), Russia and the Golden Horde. The Mongol Impact on Medieval Russian History, Indiana University Press, Bloomington, 1985.
- , The Tatar Yoke, Slavica Publishers Inc., Columbus, Ohio, 1986.
- Iuzefovich (L.A.), "Russkii posol'skii obychai XVI v.", Voprosy istorii 8 1977, p. 114-126.
- , "Iz istorii posol'skogo obychaia kontsa XV-nachala XVII v. Stolovyi tseremonial Moskovskogo dvora", Istoricheskie zapiski 98, 1977, p. 331-340.
- , "Kak v posol'skikh obychaiaikh vedetsia ...", Moscow, 1988.
- Kashtanov (S.M.), Očerki russkoi diplomatiki. Moscow, 1970.
- , Russkaia diplomatika, Moscow, 1988.
- , Iz istorii russkogo srednevekovogo istochnika: akty X-XVI vv., Moscow, 1996.
- , Aktovaia arkheografiia, Moscow, 1998.

- Keenan (E.L.), "Muscovy and Kazan: Some Introductory Remarks on the Patterns of Steppe Diplomacy", Slavic Review 26, 1967, p. 548-558.
- Kochekaev (B.-A.B.), Nogaisko-russkie otnosheniia v XV-XVIII vv, Alma-Ata, 1988.
- Kortava (T.V.), Moskovskii prikaznyi jazyk XVII veka kak osobyi tip pis'mennogo jazyka, Moscow, 1998.
- Kulmamatov (D.S.), Sredneaziatskie diplomaticheskie dokumenty i ikh russkie perevody XVII v. (Gramoty. Chelobitnye), Moscow, 1994.
- Nogman (M.), "Mäskäü boiarlary iazgan ber gramotanyn tatarcha tärjemäse", SSSR Fännär Akademiiäsenen Kazan filialy Tel, ädäbiät häm tarikh instituty khezmetläre 1, 1959, p. 203-213.
- , XVII-XVIII iözlärdäge ruscha-tatarcha kul'iazma süzleklär, Kazan, 1969.
- , Iske tatar jazuy ürnäkläre. Iugary uku iortlarynyn filologiiä bülege studentlary öchen uku kitaby, Kazan, 1971.
- Ostrowski (D.), Muscovy and the Mongols. Cross-Cultural Influences on the Steppe Frontier, 1304-1589, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 1998.
- Putevoditel' I. Tsentral'nyi Gosudarstvennyi arkhiv drevnikh aktov*, Moscow, 1946.
- Rogozhin (N.M.) (ed.), "Oko vsei velikoi Rossii". Ob istorii russkoi diplomaticheskoi sluzhby XVI-XVII vekov., Moscow, 1989.
- , Obzor posol'skikh knig iz fondov-kollektsii, khраниashchikhsia v TsGADA (konets XV-nachala XVIII v.), Moscow, 1990.
- , Posol'skie knigi Rossii kontsa XV-nachala XVII vv, Moscow, 1994.
- , У государевых дел быть указано, Moscow, 2002.
- Savva (V.I.), O Posol'skom prikaze v XVI veke, Khar'kov, 1917.
- , D'iaki i pod'iachie Posol'skogo prikaza v XVI veke. Spravochnik. Red. S.O. Shmidt. Moscow, 1983.
- Trepavlov (V.V.), Istoriia Nogaiskoi Ordy, Moscow, 2001.
- Vásáry (I.), "Bemerkungen zum uigurischen Schrifttum in der Goldenen Horde und bei den Timuriden", Ural-altaische Jahrbücher, Neue Folge 7, 1987, p. 115-126.
- , Az Arany Horda kancelláriája, Kőrösi Csoma Társaság, Budapest, 1987.
- , "Noghay", The Encyclopaedia of Islam 7 (E. J. Brill, Leiden, 1993), p. 85-86.
- Vernadsky (G.), The Mongols and Russia, Yale University Press, New Haven, 1953. (A History of Russia, vol. 3.) – Russian translation: Vernadskii, G. V., Mongoly i Rus', Tver'–Moscow, 1997.
- Veselovskii (N. I.), "Tatarskoe vliianie na russkii posol'skii tseremonial v moskovskii period russkoi istorii", Otchet Sanktpeterburgskogo Universiteta za 1910 god, Otdelenie X (1911), p. 1-19 (offprint).
- Veselovskii (S. B.), D'iaki i pod'iachie XV-XVII vv. Moscow, 1975.
- Zaitsev (I.V.), Dokumental'nye istochniki po istorii diplomaticheskikh otnoshenii postordynskikh gosudarstvennykh obrazovanii s Rossiei i Osmanskoi imperiei v XV-pervoi polovine XVI v., Avtoreferat kandidatskoi dissertatsii, Moscow, 1998.
- , Mezhdu Moskvoi i Stambulom. Moscow, 2004.
- Zhivov (V.M.), Ocherki istoricheskoi morfologii russkogo iazyka XVII-XVIII vekov., Moscow, 2004.