

CHRISTOPH Werner
Vaqf en Iran.
Aspects culturels, religieux et sociaux

[Studia Iranica Cahier 56, Association pour l'Avancement des Études Iraniennes, Paris] Leuven, Peeters, 2015, 187 p. ISBN: 978-2-910640-42-2

The volume contains five papers presented at the Collège de France in Paris for the sixth Ehsan and Latifeh Yarshater Iranian studies lecture series (19-23 November 2012). They bring together the author's research on the Islamic endowment (Per. vaqf) in Iran after an important study on the fate of a seventeenth-century Safavid era endowment in Tabriz during the early nineteenth-century Qajar period<sup>(1)</sup>.

After an introduction describing its aims, scope and plan (p. 31-34), in part one (p. 35-57: «L'institution du vaqf en Iran»), the author begins by providing a legal definition of vaqf. He then considers how previous scholars working on other parts of the Islamic world have tried to understand vaqf as a social structure, focusing, in particular, on the relevance of the term 'institution' with regard to vaqf. The author defines vaqf in Iran as being at once a charitable, legal and economic institution (p. 44-45). Next, he provides a historical contextualization of the administration of the vaqf institution in Iran and its relationship to the state. This is followed by a discussion on vaqf in Iran as a living institution. Vaqf-s continue to be constituted to the present day, however, according to the author, the blurring of terminology, and consequent confusion, between vaqf and new para-governmental type foundations (bonyād), should be traced to the Pahlavi period. The last section of the first part draws on juridical literature, in particular, on the collections of legal opinions (su'āl va javāb) of eminent Iranian jurists of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The author demonstrates how jurisprudence on vaqf was shaped by problems that arose in actual practice. He focuses on the problem of the transfer of possession of endowed property (qabḏ va iqbāḏ—a legal requirement in Imāmī Šī'ī law—) in cases where the founder declares himself the beneficiary (vaqf bar nafs) or the administrator (motevallī) of the vaqf<sup>(2)</sup>. Other problems not examined by the author include property constituted as vaqf, twice at separate times – the so-called 'doubled' vaqf<sup>(3)</sup>, or, after the death of the founder (vaqf bar mayyet)<sup>(4)</sup>.

In part two (p. 69-92: «Mouvements mystiques et fondations pieuses: les Kujujī et les Safavides au xiv<sup>e</sup> siècle»), the author examines the endowments in Tabriz and biographies of the šayḥ-sof the Kujujāniya, a rival of the Šafaviya Sufi order. Aubin had already pointed out the significance of the Kujujī (Kujujiyān) šayḥ-s in 1959<sup>(5)</sup>. The author, however, provides new insights on this Iranian notable family. By comparing the better-studied Šafaviya order centered in Ardabil<sup>(6)</sup> with the Kujujāniya in Tabriz, the author investigates whether the Kujujī šayḥ-s, as often repeated in the secondary literature, constituted a Sufi order in North West Iran in the fourteenth century. Moreover, why were they less successful compared to the Šafaviya after the fall of Jalāyerid dynasty in Āzarbāyjān in 788/1386? The author's study is based here on a detailed examination of the endowment deed (vaqfiye) in Arabic dated 782/1380 of Šayḥ Ġiyās al-Dīn Moḥammad Kujujī (d. after 784/1382) published in facsimile by Afšār in 1975<sup>(7)</sup> and the surviving references in the literary sources to the Kujujī šayḥ-s.

Part three and four are concerned with the Āstān-e Quds-e Raḏavī, the shrine in Mašhad of

(2) On the latter problem see the case of the vaqf of Loṭf 'Alī Ḥān Turshizi (d.1215/1800-1) in Zahir Bhalloo, «The Qajar jurist and his ruling: a study of judicial practice in nineteenth century Iran», Unpublished D.Phil. thesis, University of Oxford, 2013, p. 102-156.

(3) Noubaki Kondo, «The Case of 'Doubled Waqf': A Study on Qajar Shari'a Courts», Annals of Japan Association for Middle East Studies, 19-2 (2004), p. 117-142 [in Japanese].

(4) Sayyed Moḥsen Qā'em-fard, «Vaqf-nāme-ye Amīn-al-Dowle motavaffā-ye 1263 h.q. va naẓar-e marhūm Sayyed Moḥammad Bāqer Šaftī dar mowrede vaqf bar mayyet», Mirās-e Jāvidān, 19-20 (1376 h.š./1997), p. 122-127.

(5) Jean Aubin, «Études safavides. I. Šāh Ismā'il et les notables de l'Iraq Persan», Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient, 2 (1959), p. 37-81.

(6) See for example Monika Gronke, Derwische im Vorhof der Macht. Sozial und Wirtschaftsgeschichte Nordwestirans im 13. und 14. Jahrhundert, Stuttgart, Steiner, 1993, (Freiburger Islamstudien, 15).

(7) Īraj Afšār, «Vaqfiye-ye Kujujī, abvāb-al-berr-e Šayḥ Ġiyās al-Dīn Moḥammad Kujujī be sāl-e 782 hejri», Farhang-e Irān-zamīn, 21 (1354 h.š./1975), p. 1-38. The original Mongol era document is lost. For a study and an edition of the twelve-metre long copy produced in the Safavid period (c. 1108-1112/1696-1701), see Christoph Werner, Daniel Zakrweski, Hans-Thomas Tillschneider, Die Kuḡuḡi-Stiftungen in Tabriz. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Ġalayiriden (Edition, Übersetzung, Kommentar), Weisbaden, Reichert Verlag, 2013.

(1) Christoph Werner, «A Safavid Vaqf in Qajar Times –the Zahīriya in Tabriz», in Rika Gyselen and Maria Szuppe (eds.), Matériaux pour l'histoire économique du monde iranien, Paris, Association pour l'Avancement des Études Iraniennes, 1999, p. 233-248.

the eighth Twelver Shī'i emām, 'Alī b. Mūsā al-Rezā (d. 818).

In part three (p. 93-134: «Ville de lumière: Machhad et ses fondations d'illumination»), the author demonstrates the growing intersection of socioeconomic and political interests, from the Safavid period onwards, in constituting endowments dedicated specifically to lighting the shrine (mowqūfāt-e rowšanāyi), as it developed into a major pilgrimage site. Of particular importance is the author's discovery of endowments made to the shrine whose founders did not allocate revenues for specific objectives, thus allowing the shrine's administrators the freedom to pursue an investment policy on behalf of the shrine (p. 107). The final section of part three discusses the appearance towards the end of the nineteenth-century Qajar period of the new post of chief lamplighter (čerāg-bāšī) and a corps of lamplighters (čerāgčiyān) of the shrine. This obsession with lighting proved, however, to be short-lived. In 1899, Reza'y of and his son put an end to the significance of endowments for lighting by bringing the first electric generator to Mašhad from Russia.

The fourth part (p. 115-134: «Robes d'honneur conférées par l'imam Rezā») studies the power relations between the administrators of the Āstān-e Quds-e Rażavī shrine and the royal Qajar court. The author demonstrates that the post of chief administrator (motevallī-bāšī) of the shrine was an important Qajar political office rarely accorded to religious figures and sometimes held by the governor of Ḥurāsān. To interpret relations, therefore, between the shrine's administration and the Qajar court as a confrontation between the Mašhad clergy ('olamā') and the Qajar aristocracy in Tehran is incorrect. According to the author, a series of unusual royal decrees (farmān-s) from the late nineteenth-century in Arabic in which the eighth emām, 'Alī b. Mūsā al-Rezā confers robes of honour (ḥel'at) to the Qajar šāh-s, does suggest, however, that the shrine's highly bureaucratized administration enjoyed a considerable degree of autonomy, operating perhaps as a semi-independent state<sup>(8)</sup>. The custom, normalized in the Safavid period, where the šāh sent a robe of honour to the administrator (motevallī) of a sanctuary after receiving a gift (pīškeš) from him, was thus reinvented as a diplomatic exchange between two royal powers– the eighth emām (al-'ezzat be'llāh, al-soltān 'alī b. mūsā) and the Qajar šāh.

In part five (p. 135-166: «Mécénat, instruction publique et nationalisme: le vaqf à l'époque pahlavī»), the author reconstructs the series of attempts from 1858 by the Qajar, later Pahlavi, šāh-s to establish a central vaqf administration in Iran regulated by civil law<sup>(9)</sup>. Besides the administrative changes, however, new perceptions of vaqf begin to appear. On the one hand, the secularist Pahlavi propaganda saw vaqf, inextricably associated with the Shī'i clergy, as an obstacle to agrarian reform and modernization of the state. On the other hand, philanthropists such as Ḥājj Ḥoseyn Malek (1871-1972), Dr. Maḥmūd Afšār (1893/4-1983), and Dr. Moḥsen Moqaddam tried to use vaqf to provide modern education and health services. In addition, new bonyād type foundations are created, such as the Pahlavi, Alborz and Fāteḥ foundations, many of which, though not legally speaking vaqf, were nevertheless recognized as 'endowments' after the Islamic revolution and are administered today by the Central Endowments Organization (Sāzmān-e Awqāf va Omūr-e Ḥayriye).

In brief, the five papers contained in this volume are a major contribution to our understanding of how vaqf, as it emerged in the eighth-century Abbasid period, adapted to the political, economic, social and juridical realities of Iran from the fourteenth century to the present day. The author quotes the seventeenth century German traveler Kaempfer in the original Latin twice without translation (p. 103 and p.119-120) but this does not detract from the quality of the scholarship. The volume edited to the highest standards, contains a detailed bibliography (p. 9-30), an index (p. 181-186) and English summaries (p. 167-180).

Zahir Bhalloo
CEIAS/EHESS, Paris

(8) The archive of the Āstān-e Quds-e Rażavī has received little scholarly attention. For a glimpse of the bureaucratic machinery of the shrine's administration see the recently edited decree dated 1332/1914 in Omīd Reżāyī, «Ḥosn-e ham-kārī va tavānāyī-ye ḥerfe-ī dar šarā'eṭ-e boḥrānī: barresi-ye manšūr-e mo'arrekh-e šafar-e 1332-e Āstāne-ye Rażaviye», Tārikh-e Irān, 18 (1394h.š./2015), p. 81-102.

(9) For a perspective from the provinces missing in the author's discussion, see Omīd Reżāyī, «Ravand-e šekl-gīrī-ye edāre-ye ma'āref va owqāf-e kermān va qom», Mīrās-e Jāvīdān, 8 (1379h.š./2001), p. 47-57.