THE FIRST APPEARANCE OF RE^c AND HIS CONTINUOUS BEING AS DEPICTED IN THE PYRAMID TEXTS

BY
DIA' ABOU-GHAZI

Several Pyramid texts dealt with the origin of Re^c. I prefer to begin with text 542, as it treats his first appearance on earth.

It says : —

542 a : To, say : N- purified himself upon that appearing (mound) of the earth, (h^c)⁽¹⁾ on which Re^c purified himself.

542 b : He placed hib⁽²⁾ stand and he set a ladder.

542 c : Those who are in heaven⁽³⁾, they will take the arm of N.

The phrase of  in 542 a denotes that the earth was the place on which this primordial hill appeared. The purification on it refers to being surrounded by water⁽⁴⁾ i.e. the water of Nun. Thus we can consider this h^c as an insel that merged up from water. In 542 b-c the text mentions the means of ascending to sky and the ascendance of the king. This action, I think is in parallelism to what Re^c has performed after his first appearance. Thus we can state that the first appearance of Re^c was on an isle that appeared in the primordial ocean on which the god was purified and took his way to the sky.

⁽²⁾ Hib ( var. ) here refers to erecting a pedestal for the stairs as a mean for ascending the sky (cf. SETHE, Kommentar, III, 542 b and MERCER, Pyramid texts, II, 542 b).

⁽³⁾ The sky is called here  (cf. SETHE, Komm., III, 542c and MERCER, Pyramid texts, II, 542 c).

⁽⁴⁾ SETHE, ibid., 542 a; MERCER, ibid., II, 542 a (p. 259-260).

Line 990 a reveals the second way, it says :

Re^c, impregnate the body of Nut with the divine seed (the seed o^c the spirit)⁽¹⁾ which is in her».

Here Re^c is the one who causes birth and in the same time the new-born as refers  «which is in her» a phrase that reveals the causes of the daily birth of the sun or in another way refers to the eternal existence of Re^c in Nut.

Some⁽²⁾ saw in the filiation of Re^c to Nut contradiction to the theology of Heliopolis where Nut in the ennead is a grand-daughter to the chief-god and not his mother. But if we put in consideration that in the Pyramid texts, Atum was the head of the ennead of Heliopolis and never it was Re^c⁽³⁾: In these texts Re^c carried the title of the chief of the ennead, only as a matter of venerating him as a creator god⁽⁴⁾. But in all texts that detailed the ennead Atum was its chief-god. If we consider this we find no contradiction at all. The god Re^c here is independant from the ennead and the mothership of Nut came from his being always in sky⁽⁵⁾.

The Pyramid texts mention also «the father of Re^c» in several texts⁽⁶⁾ without any specification. This was considered by Sethe as Ptah⁽⁷⁾ according to the teaching of Memphis, or Geb according to an old popular story⁽⁸⁾. By this explanation, Sethe and also Mercer tried to explain text 486 c-d as referring to the fathership of Geb to Re^c⁽⁹⁾ :

486 c. N- wild-bull of the grassland comes to thee.

486 d. Henceforth N- is he who has given birth to thee and who continues to give birth to thee.

⁽¹⁾ Cf. also 532 a, 1416 c. SETHE, op. cit., IV/3, 990 a, and MERCER, op. cit., II, p. 501 took the «seed of the spirit» as denoting the king. The whole utterance is concerned with the ascendance of the king and this line expresses a wish to Re^c to be always in sky.

⁽²⁾ GARNOT, Hommage aux dieux, p. 115; SETHE, Zur Altägyptischen Sage, p. 6; KEES, Götterglaube, p. 230.

⁽³⁾ §§ 1248, 1521, 1652, 1655 and cf. 2057.

⁽⁴⁾ This is treated in detail in my thesis

upon Re^c, p. 115 (in Arabic) and will be treated in a future article.

⁽⁵⁾ § 1835 c, KEES, ibid.

⁽⁶⁾ §§ 852 a, 854 b.

⁽⁷⁾ SETHE, Komm., IV, 852 a (p. 113). Cf. also MERCER, op. cit., II, p. 434; JUNKER, Götterlehre, p. 34-35.

⁽⁸⁾ SETHE, op. cit., II, 486 (p. 320), Urgeschichte, § 71; MERCER, op. cit., II, 486 d; PIANKOFF, JEA, 20, p. 57; MASPERO, Études, II, p. 218.

⁽⁹⁾ SETHE, Komm., II, 488 (p. 320); MERCER, Pyramid texts, II, 486 d.

This text comes after several lines speaking about the advantages of the king. He is a true Egyptian as refers the phrase from Heliopolis, one without equal, who inherited his father Geb. — Then the text threatened any who tries to hinder the king in his adoration and ascent to Re^c. Then rests what could be the benefit of him to Re^c ⁽¹⁾, this great able god? So he gave Unas the ability of Re^c in creating himself daily, through coming in the shape of a bull ⁽²⁾. By this, the text assimilated the king with Re^c, a fact that was expressed in several different ways in the Pyramid texts and what this text meant from its beginning (482). Thus the king is playing here the part of Re^c not that of Geb.

In a hymn to Re^c in the Pyramid text «wr» was mentioned as Re^c father.

852 a :

To say : Greeting to thee, primordial one, son of a primordial.

Sethe and also Mercer considered the second «wr» here referring to Geb or Ptah ⁽³⁾. But I think that it refers to the primaevel abyss from which the sun-god came ⁽⁴⁾. The text here meant the antiquity of the sun-god by the first «wr» ⁽⁵⁾ and his primordial nature by the second.

In the same way I would like to explain  in line 854 b. I think that it refers to Nun, and neither to Geb ⁽⁶⁾ nor to Ptah. This is sustained by the next line which refers to Re^c as taking his place in sky after its separation from earth ⁽⁷⁾.

What urges me to refuse the paternity of Ptah to Re^c is that this fatherhood meant an political aim. The priests of Ptah tried by this to make their god the origin of all divinities even Re^c. Such a purpose seems paradoxical in a hymn that extols Re^c and makes of him the first god and the creator of humanity. The same for taking «it-f» as referring to Geb. The fatherhood of Nun to Re^c in such a hymn gives it a pleasing meaning and expresses logically the mythological view to Re^c.

⁽²⁾ See FRANKFORT, Kingship and the Gods, p. 169.

⁽³⁾ SETHE, Komm., IV, 852 a (p. 113); MERCER, II, 852 a (p. 434).

⁽⁴⁾ SETHE, Amun, p. 74 and 119.

⁽⁵⁾ SETHE, Ibid., § 145.

⁽⁶⁾ I think that the fathership of Geb to Re^c has appeared later as a consequent to the maternity of the sky to Re^c and to his first appearance after the separation of the earth and sky (cf. RUSCH, Die Stellung des Osiris, p. 7).

From this we can say that the Pyramid texts have pictured Re' as a single god that created himself from the primordial ocean and took his place in the sky from which he perpetuated his eternal being. The act of maternity is only an artificial explanation as a result of his existence in the sky. While that of paternity is a mere reference to his first appearance in the primordial abyss.
