The Lost Temples of Esna

MOHAMED ABDEL-RAHMAN ALI

For Serge Sauneron

THE TEXTS in the great temple of Esna mention three temples located to the north of the current temple. They have now disappeared. As the fourth temple, located on the eastern bank, it is only known from the writings of travellers.¹

The first temple: Pr-S3hw-R'

Because of its name, the temple called Pr-S3hw-R' may have been founded at the time of king Sahure in the 5th dynasty.² According to the texts of the great temple, the temple was a resting place on the way of the procession, probably located at the beginning of the route going to the northern field, somewhere to the north of the modern Esna village, where Labib Habachi found some stone blocks.³ All this can be deduced from the following texts.

– In Esna II, no. 77,14, the temple's name:  Pr-S3hw-R' “temple of Sahure” has been replaced by  W3h-S3hw-R' “Sahure rests”.⁴

– In Esna III, no. 199,27 (Esna V, p.25, n. (b)) it is referred to the location of the temple at the north of Esna:

² Ibid., p. 17.

³ Ibid., p. 28; see also S. SAUNERON, Les fêtes religieuses d'Esna aux derniers siècles du paganisme, Esna V, Cairo, 1962, p. 12, n. (d).

⁴ See also Esna V, p. 24, n. (m).

The departure (of the procession) of Khnum, Menhyt, Neith, Khnum and Nebtu to the temple of Sahure; resting in this place; behold, the temple of Sahure is in the north of Esna, it is the mound of the gods of Khnum temple (= Esna).

– As well as in Esna III, no. 199,28 (Esna V, p.25, n. (b)):

wnn Pr-S3hw-R' hr mhyt5 n Iwnyt

The temple of Sahure is at the north of Esna.

– According to Esna II, no. 55,1 (Esna V, p. 11), the departure of Khnum's procession, together with his Ennead, was held in the first month (Thot) of the inundation. It used to set off to the northern temple of Khnum (of the field) and then to stop in the resting place of Sahure:

sh' n Hnm-R' nb T3-snt hn' psdt.f[r] Pr- Hnm Pr-S3hw-R' hnm itn htp

The departure of the procession of Khnum-Re, lord of Esna with his Ennead: the temple of Khnum; the temple of Sahure; the union with the sun disk; resting.

– According to Esna II, no. 77,14 (Esna V, p. 24), the procession which took place in the month of Payni also used to stop in the temple of Sahure:

sh' n Hnm Nt Nbtww hnm itn wtst r Pr-S3hw-R'

The departure of the procession of Khnum, Neith and Nebtu; the union with the sun disk; rise to the temple of Sahure.

The second temple: Pr- Hnm nb sh't

This temple was located about 4 kilometres north of Esna at a place called Kom ed-Deir,⁶ on an artificial terrace facing the Nile approximately 500 m away (fig. 1).⁷ Its name Pr- Hnm n sh't “temple of Khnum of the field” could be abbreviated simply as sh't “the field”.⁸

⁸ S. SAUNERON, Esna I, p. 28.

– According to Esna III, no. 196,1 (Esna V, p. 317), it was not a simple resting station for the procession, but a permanent centre for the worshipping of an image of the god Khnum, known as “Khnum lord of the field, the beautiful protector”⁹ and his Ennead.

As for the temple of Khnum of the field, (it is) the sandy land of flood. It is the field that increases above the water-sht, the summit (beginning of the high floodwaters) rushing (?). The flood waters were repelled, the sand was mixed with the agricultural land doing a first mound placed above the primeval water at the beginning, before the creation of heaven, earth and the netherworld. The breath of life, the wind and the light, all came out by themselves among them (= heaven and earth).

– Between this temple and the temple of Pr- ntr to the north, there was a lake called the “red lake”,¹⁰ at which the procession of Khnum stopped.

- Esna II, no. 77,16 (Esna V, p. 26):

- Esna III, no. 196,2 (Esna V, p.324):

(i)r mw imi-tw.sn t3 sw hr mhyt n Pr-Hnm n sht

As for the water (of the lake), which is between them (= Khnum temple and the temple of Pr-ntr), it lies to the north of the temple of Khnum of the field.

⁹ About the god Khnum the beautiful protector, see Esna V, p. 329, n. (a), p. 333-334.

¹⁰ About this red lake, see H. DE MEULENAERE, “La légende de Phéros”, CdE 28, 1953, p. 253-255; S. SAUNERON, Esna V, p. 336-337, n. (k).

– According to Esna II, no. 55, 5-7 (Esna V, p.15), many gods gathered in the temple of Khnum lord of the field, in the period from the first day until the sixth day of the Khoiak month of each year, where they poured water and made offerings to their ancestors.

ḥpr nn ntrw n pr-Hnm n šht š3' 3bd 4 3ht nfr tr hrw 6 ḥr ḥr kbḥ n imyw imḥ.t

These gods happen to be in the temple of Khnum of the field, (since) the beginning of the fourth month of inundation (= Khoiak month) until the sixth day in order to pour water to those in the cave.

No ruins of this temple are left now, but it still existed in the 19th century AD.¹¹ When J.-Fr. Champollion visited the site, he copied some scenes and texts after what was left of the walls on the temple or on stone blocks scattered on the ground. According to these texts, the temple was dedicated to the triad of the great temple of Esna, Khnum, Nebtu and the child god Heqa:

ḏḏ mdw ḥn Hnm-R' nb šht

Recitation by Khnum-Re lord of the field.

ḏḏ mdw ḥn Nbtww nbt šht

Recitation by Nebtu mistress of the field.¹²

ḏḏ mdw ḥn Hk3 p3 ḥrd nb ḥk3w wr ḥk3w

Recitation by Heqa, the child, lord of magic, great of magic.¹³

The temple was built by Ptolemy III Euergetes I, seen with his wife Berenike II standing in front of the goddess Neith.¹⁴ Ptolemy V Epiphanes is also represented on the columns of its façade, offering milk to the child god Heqa.¹⁵ The name of Ptolemy VI Philometor has also been found,¹⁶ as well as names of several Roman emperors: Antoninus Pius,¹⁷ Augustus, Hadrian and Marcus Aurelius.¹⁸

As for the plan of the temple, it has been drawn by the French Expedition scholars (fig. 2).¹⁹ and they also drew a restitution of the monument (fig. 3). They did notice the lively colours of the decoration and in the “Description de l’Égypte”, they describe with many details the astronomical scenes representing the zodiac on the roof of the pronaos.²⁰

They found, a few meters in front of the temple, some huge sandstone blocks,²¹ which could have belonged according to D. Arnold to a cult terrace.²² It is most likely that those blocks were the ruins of the port on the Nile that was used during the processions of the gods from the great temple to this temple.

The third temple Pr-ntr

The temple named Pr-ntr was located some 900 m to the north of the previous temple, in a place called Kom Senun “mound of the swallows”²³, about 5 km north-west of Esna; it was dedicated to Osiris and Isis and to the gods who were buried in the divine mound where their ancestors Kematef, Tatenen were resting.²⁴ that no one can see, the cave of the deceased gods far from being occupied by any small animal. If a lady approached it (= temple) disturbance would happen in the entire land.

The temple, probably destroyed at the same time as the temple of Khnum of the field,²⁶ is only known nowadays thanks to the description of its ruins, left by the travellers of the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries; it was poorly built, and its decoration was similar to that of the great temple.²⁷ Its general axis as well as the cultic destination of its different rooms can be deduced from its function as a station for the processions coming from the south and as a resting place for the deceased gods.²⁸

The temple of el-Hilla (Contralatopolis)

This temple, located on the eastern bank of the Nile in Contralatopolis (facing Latopolis) near the modern village of el-Hilla, could still be seen at the beginning of the 19th century.²⁹

None of the texts of the great temple of Esna did refer to it or to the celebrations that took place on the eastern bank of the Nile, and it is only from the descriptions made by the ancient travellers and by the scholars of the French Expedition,³⁰ (fig. 4) that one can get an idea of the temple (fig. 5) but already at the end of the 18th century, the interior parts of the temple were destroyed and it was not possible to draw their plan.³¹

It was built by Ptolemy IX Soter II and dedicated to the goddess Isis.³² It was at that time a modest building about 10 m wide and has been enlarged, in the Roman period at the time of Antoninus Pius³³, by a pronaos “which contained two rows of four, nearly 7 m high sandstone columns with palm and composite capitals and Hathor-head capitals in the centre³⁴” (fig. 6). It seems that the inscriptions of the temple were unfinished, since some scenes were still set in red color, and not yet carved.³⁵

It should be noted that there is another temple in Esna, in the village of Kommir on the west bank of the Nile about 15 km south of the town of Esna dating back to Antoninus Pius. It has been discovered initially in the fifties of the last century and the preliminary report was published in the beginning of the eighties of the same century.³⁶
